

Launch of the Calouste Gulbenkian Translation Series Internship at AUA

The American University of Armenia (AUA) Certificate in Translation Program and the Armenian Communities Department of the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation are pleased to announce the launch of the Calouste Gulbenkian Translation Series Internship at AUA. The aim of the internship is to assist with the implementation of the Gulbenkian Foundation's Translation Series project, which will make seminal texts in the humanities and the social sciences available in Armenian (click here for the list of texts to be translated in the first phase of the project).

The internship is offered to a current student of the Certificate in Translation Program for the duration of one year, including the summer. It is an exceptional opportunity for students to apply themselves in the field of translation and publishing in Armenia, with an emphasis on academic rigor and practical experience.

The Gulbenkian Translation Series intern will coordinate the meetings of the advisory committee, communicate and follow-up with the selected translators, curate a digital platform that will serve the creation of new glossaries, work with publishers and assist with the publication and dissemination of the published texts in Armenia. The student nominated for the 2017-18 internship is Margo Gevorgyan.

Internship advisor and lecturer Shushan Avagyan stressed that, "The internship builds upon the foundation, knowledge, and skills students have acquired from the courses offered in the Certificate in Translation Program, and it will give them a unique experience and invaluable professional training. Our program is the ideal home for such an initiative and we are incredibly excited about our collaboration with the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation."
